1. For what kinds of expenditures do I get reimbursed?

Employees should get reimbursed for losses and reasonable expenses incurred while doing their job. To be eligible for reimbursement, you must be able to show that you incurred a particular expense or loss while performing services at the request of, or for the benefit of, your employer. You also must show that you performed the services under the direction or control of the employer.

2. Does my employer have to reimburse me for mileage on my vehicle?

Yes, but your employer may choose how to provide the reimbursement. Your employer may choose to reimburse you a reasonable mileage rate that will, on average, substitute for your actual cost in operating your vehicle for business purposes. Employers who reimburse for mileage usually use the rate suggested by the Internal Revenue Service (IRS). The rate as of January 1, 2015 was $.575 per mile. Please refer to the IRS website for the most up-to-date mileage reimbursement rate. Employers may, instead, choose to pay for the actual costs incurred while operating your vehicle for business purposes. Under this option, rather than pay you $.575 per mile, your employer would pay for the actual amount of gasoline your car used, etc. while being used for business.

3. What happens if my personal vehicle is damaged or stolen while I'm on company business?

This depends on whether your employer pays you a reasonable mileage rate reimbursement. If your employer does reimburse you for mileage using a reasonable rate, your employer does not have to pay if your vehicle is damaged or stolen (unless the damage or theft was directly caused by your employer's negligence). However, if your employer chooses instead to pay you the actual cost of operating your vehicle, then any loss or damage to your vehicle must be paid for by the employer.
